Asus has taken the internal construction of its ZenFone 4 series all the way back to its very roots, fully embracing the concept of performance first and then designing for each aspect of the system with a powerful yet elegant appearance. The ZenFone 4 is a tall device with a long body and no bezels, except for the display that makes its way onto the outside. The ZenFone 4 camera is the latest to come to the fold, with a 12-megapixel rear camera on the back, while the front faces with a 5-megapixel selfie camera. The front facing camera is capable of capturing video and images with the same quality as the rear camera, giving users the option of taking both photos and video at once. For connectivity the ZenFone 4 is a 4G LTE version of the ZenFone 4 series with support for Band 40, Band 12, and support for Band 20 LTE bands. The software also has built-in support for GPS, with virtual buttons on the device, as well as NFC, which allows the user to use the device to purchase apps and content via a tap. CPU and RAM The ZenFone 4 comes with a MediaTek Helio P22, which is also featured in a handful of other devices out on the market. The MediaTek P22 is an octa-core processor with eight ARM Cortex-A53 cores clocked at 1.8GHz. The P22 also contains three ARM Cortex-A7 cores, which are clocked at 1.8GHz, along with four ARM Cortex-A53 cores clocked at 1.3GHz, all combined with Mali-G51 GPUs. This specifications are a decent upgrade from the previous series.
