BBC promises to put its music back on the web, but what's that we hear? - rbanffy ====== zimpenfish I'm only vaguely aware that the BBC aren't at all enthusiastic about the iPlayer platform as an alternative to broadcasting in the normal way. [> BBC director Tony Hall told the BBC Trust in a written evidence that he was > "conscious of the need for the BBC to be seen as offering something new and > to offer superior value for licence fee payers" Q: BibLatex gives me errors, additional question I recently had to get my latex code converted over to biber and biblatex. I'm having issues with it still. I have the following issue. Edit 2: I just noticed that I have never received any problem when trying it on other editors like Bluefish. But it gives me the error on a few different editors I am using to edit my tex file (texmaker, sublime 3). A: I wrote a blog post about this. Basically: sometimes the layout of the file can cause errors in TeX editors, so you should make sure the order is correct. The file should look like this: \documentclass{article} \usepackage[backend=biber,natbib]{biblatex} \bibliography{biblatex-examples.bib} \begin{document} text \printbibliography \end{document} Q: Using R with ArcGIS 10.1 over HTTPS without seeing authentication dialogs I am writing an application using R and ArcGIS 10.1. Is there a way to avoid this? A similar question has already been posted in the ESRI forum but no one answered. I am using ArcGIS 10.1.1 for Desktop on Windows XP and the latest

What's New in the Adobe Photoshop 2021 (Version 22.4.1)?

The world of bug hunts is unlike any other, and it's an experience that millions of people have had. Each hunt involves a seemingly easy task: Finding and photographing a bug that may be all but invisible in the long grass. It's a task that often involves hours of waiting and walking in search of these unique critters. It's hard work, and the search for the perfect bug can sometimes lead to frustration, because the best bugs are not always easy to find. The best photographers are always the ones who follow their instincts and those who like to have fun. One such photographer is Eliot Lin. Lin is a huge fan of bug hunts and enjoys getting up at the crack of dawn to head out for a full day of exploring and taking photos. On one such adventure, the joy of capturing this ant was immediately evident. "It started as a backup plan for our hunt," Lin said of his love for photography and his best bug. "It was after discovering that it was possible to capture an amazing shot of a fire ant without using insect repellent on the camera lens." After a few more hours of searching, Lin discovered that the ant he had originally spotted had moved away from the mound and it was now easier to photograph. "At first I didn't realize it was a fire ant," Lin said of his first encounter with this particular ant. "It took a while to figure out." These fire ants are a type of ant known as a molopo, and they can be found in a wide range of habitats including forests, plains and damp, humid regions. The fire ant needs a carbon source to survive and once the ant has found it, the colony digs a small pit as it slowly begins to feed on the resource. Some ant species build their nests in the ground while others form mounds. Regardless of the method by which they build their mounds, the ants use their powerful mandibles to chop the resource or bury it. When the ants finish their work on a particular area, they will then start over on the same mound. Ant colonies can create up to five meters deep nest mounds. These colonies can be present all year round but tend to use the most humid areas in the summer, during rainy periods and over the dry season. Lin's photos have been
