The reason for this question is to try and rephrase this question, so that others can have an idea what I am experiencing. I copied a folder and a couple of important folders out of my C drive with File Explorer. Since there were thousands of files in the folder, it took 1-2 minutes to close the file explorer window and open it again. Because of this, I took a risk and left my computer unattended for a couple of minutes. When I came back, the C drive was encrypted. I am having a problem finding/copying back the original files from my Recycle Bin, and will need a software to be able to do that. I tried moving it to my network, but I was unable to do it with File Explorer and copying them back. Does anyone know a good alternative? A: There's been a bunch of questions about this, and there's no simple answer to that. If you really need an answer, I'd recommend this post: In general, though, I would tell you to backup your data, even if it's only the copy you're making. Q: How to access SVG files aa67ecbc25
