This work presents a study of percutaneous transhepatic biliary drainage in pigs (n = 9). The technique proposed by Seldinger is modified and a locking device is used, replacing the needle by a rigid guide through which a flexible tube is passed. The study was carried out in accordance with the Guide for the Care and Use of Laboratory Animals published by the National Institutes of Health (publication no. 85-23, revised 1985). The puncture was performed with a 17 gauge needle. The site of puncture was between the 3rd and 4th lumbar vertebrae. The solution used was a solution of methylene blue (0.1% of normality) and physiological serum. The administration of methylene blue did not modify the haemodynamic parameters. The difficulties encountered were similar to those already described in other studies. Percutaneous transhepatic biliary drainage is a valuable technique for the treatment of biliary complications.
